Nathan Smith, Director of Technology – College of Education & Human Services – Utah State University
List last updated January 10, 2014

We have been hunting for free or open source applications the could help educators as they teach or manage their classrooms and digital files. The following list (with links to the downloads) are some that we have found. Be sure to do your research on any of these before downloading and using them...

- 1) to make sure the software will do what you're expecting it to do.
- 2) to make sure the software will run properly on your particular hardware and system.
- 3) to make sure you fully understand how to use said software, and the possible mishaps that may occur from such use.

As always, make sure you have a backup of your files and system before you begin to play with new software installations.
